

1. Which subset of sensor features provides the most predictive power for identifying product failures while minimizing model complexity?
2. Can failed products be grouped into distinct clusters based on their sensor data, indicating the presence of different types of failure behavior?
3. Do any sensor measurements show evidence of drift or instability over time, potentially indicating the need for recalibration or maintenance?